

Joshua Joseph

Joshua is a student and a teacher, a seeker and a guide, an author, a philosopher, and an embracer of all that can be questioned. Through his mentorship, writing, and The Inflection Point platform, he works with his readers, audience, and clients to navigate life-altering moments with more freedom, awareness, effectiveness, and joy.

Relentless in his personal growth, Joshua is constantly seeking new wisdom and perspective through people and books. His debut novel, Dak Ackerthefifth and the Ethics of Heroism, is the manifestation of all he has consumed: a story for those interested in unconventional explorations of modern living, or in the probing of today's invisible guiding narratives.

A graduate of Tufts University and the UC Berkeley Haas School of Business, Joshua lives the Pirkei Avot teaching "Who is wise? He who learns from every person," taking disparate teaching, philosophies, and tradition, and reconciling them into something meaningful and relevant.

Joshua is the proud father of two daughters, whose Hebrew names are Miriam, named for her great grandmother who brought the family to the United States to escape the Holocaust, and Simone, named for her grandfather who established the Jim Joseph Foundation.

Learn more about Joshua, his work, and his writings at The Inflection Point.